The fat roofer covers the roof.
Not my roof, no, the neighbour's roof.
That woke me up at eight o'clock this morning already!
I never thought how much noise that makes.

I wonder what he's trying to achieve with that noise,
the fat roofer, who's covering that roof,
and why doesn't he cover the roof a little more gently
and is that going to go on all day today.

I'll be quite specific: this roofer is a real pain in the ass
with his electric roof tile cutter
from Black & Decker.

Unfortunately, he works with it from morning till night.
I'll go right over there and complain,
before this goes on forever
and I'll pull the plug!

But even the next day – oh, my God! –
from eight o'clock on the roof is being covered again.
I am rudely torn from my night's rest
by the fat roofer's noisy comeback.

But while I am watching from the quarterdeck
as he covers the roof there,
I notice: oh, he's doing it right!
The roof is becoming more and more of a magnificent object!

Respect! I look over
and admire the roofing tactics.
Hey, this guy could actually write a book on roofing didactics!

Since then the fat roofer and I are
in perfect harmony, Bro!
And immediately, I wish wholeheartedly he would cover my roof soon!
